

Letter to Self 2022-2023

Dear Mr. Cheung,

I think it's going to be a good year! Maturity and leadership is something that my classes before lacked, and I think transitioning to teaching grades 6 and 7s will be a good one! Based on the first two days, I can tell that we're a MUCH quicker learning group. They've impressed me by how quickly they've picked up on routines and expectations. This is an interesting class because it's a "new" class, but not really new. There's only around three students who I've never ever taught! I like re-connecting / re-fortifying the ones I've had. I'm sure they feel the same, especially when it comes to re-fortifying me :).

My goals this year is to really stay organized this year and to plan lessons in advance. I'm looking forward to the feeling of peace, knowing I've already planned everything. I'm also excited about being able to facilitate more sophisticated projects without with less fear of students burning and hurting themselves! There's a lot of potential for fun things this year.

I'm really anticipating fun field trips! Not so much the planning of these trips, but certainly the going on these trips. It's been YEARS since I've gone to Playland, so that's probably going to be the most exciting part of the year... Assuming I don't have to watch the kids who are not going on rides. I'm also looking to to grad ceremonies. It's a lot of work and I'm sure I'll have to learn really quickly, but I missed sending people off to gr. 8. It's been 5 years since I've done that and I look forward to doing that this year once again?
