

Welcome to Honkin' Big Rock Island! This island has minimal vegetation across its rocky landscape. Large hotsprings and freshwater ponds have been carved out underground- many different fish and slippery critters live in the pools. Watch out for the sinister GobbleBobble, a vicious predator that nests on the rocky surface and catches unsuspecting prey with its razor sharp talons.

Welcome to Chilly-Willy Island! This mountainous island is rocky and cold. Deep glaciers cover the mountaintops although there are some forested areas lower down. Berries are plentiful in the forest- there are few animals on the island except for the tasty Anabanana Worm which burrows deep into the snow-covered ground. The Anabanana is nocturnal and will only venture above ground at night.

Welcome to Sandy-Shorts Island! This desert paradise is covered in luscious palm trees with coconuts. The island has little other plant life due to its arid climate and the thin layer of sand covering the entire island. Predators are scarce on the island but there are many nasty little sand fleas hopping around which can make things itchy and annoying.

Welcome to Big Stink Island! This low lying island is covered in stinky-yicky-smelly marshes which are goopy and gunky and just plain muddy and gross. Tall grasses grow in the marshes and are home to many small flying insects. The island tends to be warm (because of all those stinky marsh gases). There are several predators on the island including large eels that hang out in the marshes.
